They are made possible by the conjunction of several conditions: the dispersal of populations, the disembedding of personal identities Giddens, the development of new communication technologies, the growing influence of non-governmental organizations, and above all the increasing awareness of the common risk conditions faced by the world population Beck, Internet address URL. They cannot be institutionalized and do not have clear, predictable patterns. My analysis will proceed as follows. NGOs repeatedly call official agencies to account when development projects are harmful to local communities. It provides assistance to refugees, displaced people and their host communities in conflict zones around the world. More broadly, there are real concerns where global civil-society organisations have opaque decision-making processes or do not make reports of their activities widely available.

Much of the literature on the subject seems to assume that global civil society is on the agenda. Agency for International Development.
